The Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat is a vital interface between global policies in the economic, social and environmental spheres and national action. The Department works in three main interlinked areas: (i) it compiles, generates and analyses a wide range of economic, social and environmental data and information on which States Members of the United Nations draw to review common problems and to take stock of policy options; (ii) it facilitates the negotiations of Member States in many intergovernmental bodies on joint courses of action to address ongoing or emerging global challenges; and (iii) it advises interested Governments on the ways and means of translating policy frameworks developed in United Nations conferences and summits into programmes at the country level and, through technical assistance, helps build national capacities.

NOTE

The designations employed and the presentation of the material in this publication do not imply the expression of any opinion whatsoever on the part of the Secretariat of the United Nations concerning the legal status of any country or territory or of its authorities, or concerning the delimitation of its frontiers or boundaries.

Where the designation "country or area" appears in the headings of tables, it covers countries, territories or areas.

Regular updates of the Population and Vital Statistics Reports are available at the United Nations Statistics Division web site:

ST/ESA/STAT/SER.A/230/231

This issue of the Population and Vital Statistics Report presents data on population size (total, male and female) from the latest available census of the population, national official population estimate for 2002 or 2003, and the number and rate for vital events (births, deaths and infant deaths) for the latest available year after 1980[1]. It also presents United Nations estimates of the mid-year population of the world, with its major areas and regions, for 2002 and 2003. These estimates were prepared by the Population Division of the United Nations Secretariat,[2] while the national estimates were provided by the respective countries and areas. The data are presented in three tables:

Table 1. Estimated mid-year population by major area and region, 2002 and 2003

Table 2. Population, latest available census and estimates for 2002 or 2003

Table 3. Live births, deaths and infant deaths, latest available year since 1980

TECHNICAL NOTES

A. Population

Estimated mid-year population (table 1), prepared by the United Nations Population Division of the United Nations Secretariat, is derived on the basis of assumptions regarding future trends in fertility, mortality and international migration. A brief description of the methodology and explanation of the medium variant assumptions, on which these estimates were based, are presented in the World Population Prospects: The 2002 Revision.[2]

Latest population census (table 2) represents the results of a nation-wide population census available in the Demographic Yearbook database of the United Nations Statistics Division. The data presented are from censuses conducted on either a de jure or de facto basis – using different methods of enumeration, be it conventional/traditional, based on administrative/population registers or a combination of methods that may include a sample survey. The code displayed in the column "Code" indicates whether the population census was conducted on the de facto or de jure basis. Population census data are presented for 235 countries and areas.

Mid-year population estimates for 2002 or 2003 (table 2) refer to 1 July of the given year unless otherwise noted, and are presented as reported by national statistical authorities.

B. Vital statistics

Data presented in table 3 refer to live births, deaths and infant deaths (excluding foetal deaths) for the latest available year after 1980 that occurred to the de facto population within the present national boundaries and were recorded in the civil registers of the country or area, unless otherwise noted. As far as possible, the data are for live births or deaths that occurred during the specified year. In some cases, however, they relate to events registered during the year and may include events that occurred in previous years, and exclude events that occurred during that year, but were not registered.

Quality of registration refers to the assessment, when known, of the completeness of civil registration of countries and areas, as follows: a "C" indicates a complete coverage (i.e., covering 90 per cent or more of the events occurring in the year); and a "U" indicates an incomplete coverage (i.e., covering less than 90 per cent of the events occurring in the year). Data not derived from civil registration and considered reliable, such as estimates derived from projections, other estimation techniques or population and housing census, are indicated by "I".

Rates. Birth and death rates are the number of births or deaths reported in the specified year per thousand mid-year population. Official national estimates of mid-year population are used to calculate these rates. The infant mortality rate is estimated as the number of deaths of infants less than one year of age per thousand live births in the same year. Unless otherwise noted, the rates shown were computed by the Statistics Division of the United Nations Secretariat. Rates were only computed when the numerator—number of births, deaths or infant deaths—is at least 30. Furthermore, rates were computed only if the quality code for births, deaths or infant deaths (see the paragraph above) is "C" or "I".

C. Symbols

The following symbols and notations are used:

...	Data or information not available/rates not computed
-	Magnitude zero
I	Source of vital statistics other than civil registration
*	Provisional figure
+	Data tabulated by year of registration rather than occurrence
C	Complete registration (at least 90 per cent coverage of the vital event in the year)
U	Incomplete registration (less than 90 per cent coverage of the vital event in the year)
DF	Population de facto
DJ	Population de jure

D. Highlights

1. Population censuses

One goal of this report is to present the most recent data for total, male and female population collected by a national population census. In the majority of cases, national population censuses are carried out once every ten years, i.e., usually once every census decade. A census decade, as defined and implemented by the United Nations, encompasses ten years starting with the fifth year of a decade and ending in the fourth year of the next decade, e.g., the 2000 census decade started in 1995 and will end at the end of 2004. Detailed information on planned, conducted or postponed national population censuses is collected by the United Nations Demographic Yearbook system and presented at: http://unstats.un.org/unsd/demographic/census/cendate/index.htm.

Census figures for total, male and female population in this publication are presented for 234 countries and areas. Out of these, 169 (or approximately 72 per cent) refer to the 2000 round of censuses (i.e., the census was conducted and data refer to one of the years in the 1995-2004 range), 44 (or approximately 19 per cent) refer to the 1990 census round (1985-1994), and 21 (approximately 9 per cent) refer to the 1980 or previous census round. The data presented reflect the following situations: not all countries conducted censuses in the 2000 round; the census round is still under way; countries have conducted their census but have not released the data yet; data, although released by national authorities, did not yet reach the Demographic Yearbook. In sum, readers will find the most recent census data, including the date of the population census, for 169 countries and areas of the world.

2. Vital statistics

The main source of vital statistics is records of vital events from civil registration, which involves the continuous gathering of information on all relevant vital events occurring within the boundaries of a country. The availability of detailed vital statistics for a country or area illustrates national capacity in the compilation of these statistics from civil registration systems. With this in mind, this report aims at presenting the most recent data on total live births, deaths and infant deaths received by the Demographic Yearbook system so far.

Data on live births for 2002 or 2003 are presented for 97 out of 235 countries and areas (approximately 41 per cent); for 47 countries and areas data are available for 2000 or 2001 (or 20 per cent); and for 57 countries and areas (approximately 24 per cent) data refer to a year between 1980 and 1999. It has to be emphasized that statistics on live births are not available for 34 countries (approximately 14 per cent). It must also be emphasized that the number of countries and areas for which data on infant deaths are not available is higher, 52 (approximately 22 per cent of the total).

When vital statistics are available for a country or area, their source is not necessarily a civil registration system. It may be a periodic survey, national projection or census. These sources are considered reliable despite lacking continuity, simultaneity and universality of a civil registration system. On the other hand, if the source of vital statistics is a civil registration system, it is not always complete. Completeness here refers to the coverage of the civil registration system that was used for deriving vital statistics. If less than 90 per cent of all births and deaths (including infant deaths) are registered by the civil registration system, the coverage is assessed as incomplete. The assessment of completion is produced by national statistical authorities and reported to the Demographic Yearbook system. The graph below presents the number of countries or areas by the source of vital statistics, and in the case of civil registration, by the completeness of its coverage.
